Your Passport: Don't Leave Home Without It

1 | 2 | 3 | Next >

Why you need one—now, more than ever—and how to protect it from harm.

By Robert Isenberg

At first glance, a U.S. passport is just a little booklet, about the size of a pocket notebook, a slim binding of heavy, baby-blue paper. But with this tiny document, you can visit almost any nation on Earth, earning approving nods from customs officials and collecting exotic stamps, one border post at a time. With a few notable exceptions—such as Cuba and North Korea—a U.S. passport is respected in almost every harbor and airport on the globe.

And recently, with the tightening of Homeland Security, your passport isn't just a ticket to places—it's your ticket back. If you're finally taking that romantic trip to Europe or you've bought tickets for an Asian adventure, your passport is mandatory for travel to most foreign countries. And beginning on Jan. 23, 2007, the document will become even more essential for zipping around North America. The Western Hemisphere Travel Initiative will require that anyone who takes a flight to Canada, Mexico or the Caribbean must have a passport or other approved identity card.

Such a powerful document needs protection—these days especially. Identity theft is a constant danger, and the last thing anyone wants is for his or her name attached to gun-running or international fraud. More important, your passport is the most effective proof that you are, in fact, you. A passport makes life very easy, but a stolen passport can make life very, very hard. If you've never had a passport before, here are some tips on how to obtain one, how to carry it, and what to do if—heaven forbid—someone nabs it while you're leaning over a table of souvenirs.

- Expedia: Planning a trip outside the U.S.? See today's top travel deals

How to get a passport

If you've never applied for a passport, the process can be intimidating—after all, it's not often you're dealing with the U.S. Department of State. Really, though, it's pretty straightforward: First, you have to get an official passport photo of yourself. This can be done in lots of places: Camera stores, pharmacy chains, FedEx Kinko's outlets—any company outfitted to develop film is usually authorized to take a passport photo. Next, you have to track down a copy of your birth certificate, fill out your passport application (inelegantly called the DS-11), and turn in your materials along with the $97 fee at the nearest passport facility (<http://iafdb.travel.state.gov>). Do this as soon as you can—it can take several weeks, sometimes longer, to receive your passport. You can request expedited service, but faster delivery costs an extra $60.

Getting a passport may seem like an annoying process, but there are no tests to pass, and adult passports are valid for 10 years—which means a full decade of carefree travel by air, sea and rental car.

We screen our laptops, remove our shoes and pack our shampoo into tiny containers. But are all of these painstaking airport security measures really keeping us safe?

By John Rosenthal

If you're confused about what you can and can't do at the airport these days, you're not alone. The ever-changing rules about what's allowed to fly have everyone but the most frequent travelers scratching their heads, repacking their bags and removing their belts and shoes. These restrictions not only cause lengthy delays at security checkpoints nationwide; they've turned air travel into a trial.

First it was pocketknives, which were banned onboard after the Sept. 11 attacks along with seemingly innocuous items such as knitting needles, sewing scissors and nail clippers. Then came the footwear screenings, after

Richard Reid's bumbling attempt on Dec. 22, 2001, to blow up a plane with explosives hidden in his shoes. (Don't expect this policy to change anytime soon. According to news accounts, a recent FBI-Homeland Security bulletin warns that terrorists are still attempting to use "modified footwear" to conceal explosive devices.)

Three years later, the Transportation Security Administration banned butane lighters from carry-on luggage, even though Reid used matches in his attempt to light his shoes. More than 11 million flicked Bics later, that policy was rescinded in 2007; lighters and matches are now allowed in carry-on luggage, though not in checked baggage.

Then came liquids, which were initially banned outright after British police foiled a terrorist plot in August 2006 that involved liquid explosives. (No more sippy cups for you, Junior.) The restriction was relaxed a month later to allow travelers to carry on a quart-sized bag of containers with no more than 3 ounces of liquid in each.

Why 3 ounces and not 4? "Several eventualities were discussed and researched," including multiple actors working in cooperation," says TSA spokesman Christopher White. With the one-bag, 3-ounce limit, White says "the most likely outcome is a small explosion in an airport restroom or aircraft lavatory, injuring the perpetrators only while mixing highly unstable chemicals."

The latest items to arouse suspicion are remote-control toys, which could be used as detonators; snow globes, which contain liquids; and baggy clothes and turbans, which could be used to hide plastic explosives.

Ever since Sept. 11, we've spent billions of dollars on securing airplanes, sifting through the belongings of 2 million people per day and curtailing Americans' civil liberties in the name of freedom. But do all of the extra checkpoints, pat-downs and searches make us any safer?

Border-Crossing to Require Proof of Citizenship

If you're accustomed to driving across the border to shop, ski or sightsee in Canada, you need to know about new border-crossing requirements.

Starting Jan. 31, citizens of the U.S. and Canada ages 19 or older will have to present a government-issued photo ID (such as a driver's license) along with proof of citizenship (such as a birth certificate or naturalization certificate) in order to enter or depart the U.S. by land or sea.

Children ages 18 and younger need proof of citizenship, such as a birth certificate.

The requirements also apply to Americans driving or sailing to and from Mexico, and to those traveling by sea to and from Bermuda and the Caribbean.

According to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, the new rules end the practice of "accepting oral declarations of citizenship alone." Details are available at <http://www.dhs.gov/xtrvlsec>.

The Cruise Lines International Association says most cruise companies already require proof of citizenship and government ID for boarding. "These requirements have been industry standards, but will now be required by law and enforced as of Jan. 31," CLIA said in a statement.

A separate proposal to require passports or other secure documents for land and sea travel from the Caribbean, Canada and Mexico has been postponed. The DHS originally proposed that requirement to take effect this coming summer. A bill signed by President Bush in December included a provision delaying the passport requirement until the summer of 2009.

But you do need a passport if you're flying into the U.S. from Canada, Mexico and the Caribbean under rules that went into effect in 2007. Those regulations resulted in a deluge of passport applications, with the State Department issuing a record 18.4 million passports in fiscal year 2007, compared to 12.1 million in 2006. Thirty percent of Americans now hold passports, up from 27 percent. Last summer, the time it took to get a passport doubled, but processing times are now back to normal (four to six weeks); details are available at <http://www.travel.state.gov/passport>.

If you don't have a passport and you're craving a Caribbean getaway this winter, remember that U.S. citizens may still travel to and from Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, which are U.S. territories, without a passport. But bear in mind that U.S. Customs and Border Protection officers may ask your citizenship when departing on these flights, so having your birth certificate available is helpful.

Changing intranet security settings

Here are answers to some common questions about intranets and intranet security.

What is an intranet?

An intranet is a private network, usually within a company or organization. An intranet uses the same protocols as the Internet and can contain the same types of content.

What's an intranet used for?

Intranets are commonly used to store internal, company-related content, such as information about company policies or employee benefits. Because security is tightly controlled by the administrator, the security settings for intranet content can be less restrictive than the settings used for content that comes from the Internet.

What's the difference between the Internet and an intranet?

One difference between the Internet and an intranet is the way pages are addressed. On the Internet, webpages typically are addressed through a full domain name, such as www.microsoft.com. Depending on how the administrator has configured the network, the domain name is usually not needed to access intranet sites and many webpages can be accessed by typing a common name (for example, http://benefits). If intranet security is enabled, Internet Explorer will recognize the difference between the addresses and use the appropriate security zone settings.

Do I need to set anything in Internet Explorer to have intranet security?

Not usually. When you first install Internet Explorer, it will check to see if you are on an intranet and set address checking appropriately. Your network administrator can also control whether Internet Explorer uses the intranet security zone settings. If Internet Explorer recognizes that you are on an intranet, you do not need to do anything else. If it does not recognize that you're on an intranet, follow these steps to tell Internet Explorer that you are on one:

To tell Internet Explorer that you are on an intranet

1. Click to open Internet Explorer.
2. Click the Tools button, and then click Internet Options.
3. Click the Security tab, and then click Local intranet.
4. Click the Sites button.
5. In the Local intranet dialog box, clear the Automatically detect intranet network check box.
6. Select all other check boxes, and then click OK twice.

❑ Why do I get an Information bar notice about the intranet?

If you are connected to an intranet but receive an Information bar notice that an intranet address has been detected, it means that Internet Explorer did not automatically detect your intranet. To tell Internet Explorer that you are on an intranet, follow the steps in the section above.

❑ How do I connect to my company's intranet?

To learn how to connect to your company's intranet, you'll need to talk to your network administrator or search for "network" in Windows Help and Support. The settings discussed above control how Internet Explorer works with intranet addresses, but those settings will not help you set up an intranet connection if one does not already exist.

If Internet Explorer is set using its original settings, you'll see the Information bar with the following information:

- If a website tries to install an ActiveX control on your computer or run an ActiveX control on an ActiveX control.
- If a website tries to open a pop-up window.
- If a website tries to download a file to your computer.
- If a website tries to access the content on your computer.
- If your security settings are being recommended for site.
- If you access my company's intranet, but have not turned on Internet Explorer's checking. For more information, see Changing Internet security settings.
- If you access Internet Explorer with add-ons disabled.
- If you need to install an updated ActiveX control or add-on program.
- The webpage address can be displayed with an unknown language known as symbols but you don't have the language installed.

❑ How do I use the Information bar?

❑ Can I turn off the Information bar?

❑ Which messages are displayed in the Information bar?

Internet Explorer Information bar: frequently asked questions

Here are answers to some common questions about the Information bar.

What is the Internet Explorer Information bar?

When will I see the Information bar?

If Internet Explorer is still using its original settings, you'll see the Information bar in the following circumstances:

- If a website tries to install an ActiveX control on your computer or run an ActiveX control in an unsafe manner.
- If a website tries to open a pop-up window.
- If a website tries to download a file to your computer.
- If a website tries to run active content on your computer.
- If your security settings are below recommended levels.
- If you access an intranet webpage, but have not turned on intranet address checking. For more information, see Changing intranet security settings.
- If you started Internet Explorer with add-ons disabled.
- If you need to install an updated ActiveX control or add-on program.
- The webpage address can be displayed with native language letters or symbols but you don't have the language installed.

Preview the appearance of a printed webpage

When you print a webpage, Internet Explorer automatically scales it to fit within the margins of your paper. This sometimes causes the page to be reduced in size. Internet Explorer also reduces the size of a page slightly if a single line of text (sometimes called an orphan) would print on its own page. You can use Print Preview to see how a printed webpage will look and to adjust page orientation, scaling, and margins.

To preview how a page will look when it is printed

1.  Click to open Internet Explorer.
2. Go to the page you want to print.
3. Click the arrow to the right of the Print button , and then click Print Preview.

Change how a page is displayed on the screen and printed page

The following table describes Print Preview options that affect both what you see on the screen and what appears on the printed page.

Landscape 	Print the page horizontally (landscape orientation).
Page Setup 	Change paper size, orientation, or margins and add headers or footers.
Turn headers or footers on or off 	Decide whether to print additional information (such as the date, website address, or page number) at the top or bottom of the page.
Change Print Size 	Stretch or shrink the page size to fill the printed page.
Adjust margins 	This feature replaces the zoom feature that was in previous versions of Internet Explorer.
Page 1 of 1	Drag the horizontal or vertical markers to change where the page will print.
Print Document	Specify the page to display.
	Print the page using the current settings.
